

Hello, Everybody!

I will soon be inviting you (if I have not already) to our new Google Classroom. Or, if you're eager to take a look, I have codes at the bottom. We will still be using our regular blog as the main source for information: <https://monsonenglish.wordpress.com>; however, Google Classroom will offer a way to stay connected and to turn in assignments. I'm new to this, so my learning curve has been pretty steep, and I'm excited about that! But I miss all of you and hope you're doing well, staying home, and staying safe.

For now, what can you be working on? Well, no new assignments. Here's a review of what you can and should be doing now:

- Drama: Basic Play Review to evaluate a production.
- AP Lit and Comp: write your Hamlet paper, read your Independent Novel/Play, complete MWDSs for Hamlet and Independent Novel/Play
- Speech: practice and upload a practice of your narrative "Unfortunate Accident or Turning Point" speech to your speech file. You will be uploading your polished recording of this speech for a grade to Google Classroom once that is all set up.

All of the above learning will be turned in via Google Classroom, once that is up and running. On Monday, April 6, you will all get instructions about what comes next and how to do it.

Please keep in mind that we are all learning new things very quickly (patience and technology top my list). I hope that you are not bombarded with an overwhelming amount of work come April 6th. I think we teachers are all trying to be mindful of that.

Stay Safe!

Ms. Monson
